Performing Preludes, Books I and II by Claude Debussy, in commemoration of the centennial of Debussy's death.

Praised by critics as “a grand pianist” (Il Cittadino, Italy) and as a “master of the piano” (Music Magazine ‘Auditorium’, Korea), Marianna Prjevalskaya captivates audiences with emotional intensity, maturity, richness, and beauty of tone. She was complimented by Frank Daykin as having given “one of the major piano recitals of the season.” He also was impressed by “her sensitivity to harmonic color and her natural glorious romantic rubato.” (New York Concert Review, New York). Tim Smith, of the Baltimore Sun, was “impressed by Prjevalskaya’s beauty of expression, and stated that she was a “pianist who has moved well beyond the hone-the-technique phase—one that is able to concentrate entirely on making music.”
